Photoshop has more sophisticated features than most image editing programs. And its use in the rest of this chapter doesn't require a lot of specialized knowledge. But if you know a little more about layers, they're a core feature of Photoshop and will be discussed in Chapter 14. In this chapter, you find out about how to manage, save, and export images you've created in Photoshop and how to share them online. Creating Your First Image After you open an image or a document and start to edit it with Photoshop, you may find yourself thinking "Well, that wasn't too hard, now let me create another." Once you do that, create a new image and don't touch the original image. The previous image is shown in Figure 18-1. Photoshop isn't designed to edit all types of images, so you need to know how to create images of your own before you begin to edit other images. The process for creating a new image in Photoshop is simple. Here's how to create a new document: 1. Choose File⇒New. The New Document dialog box appears. 2. Type a name for your new image in the Name field. If the type is set to Grayscale or RGB, or if you choose RGB or CMYK, the Color Mode drop-down menu displays a series of default colors based on your color mode preference, which is discussed in detail in Chapter 16. For most projects, the default is RGB because it's a standard setting in most other programs. By choosing Grayscale, you save time and space because the image will be 100 percent black and white. You'll cover more information about color in Chapter 16. 3. Choose the option for a new image type or select an existing image to open it. If you select an existing image and create a new document, Photoshop opens an existing document, but it creates a new document. Figure 18-1: Choose File⇒New to open a new document. 4. Select a source from the Source pop-up menu. Photoshop uses three basic sources: • The Open dialog box offers several standard source options, including Pictures, Scanner, and Web. These are explained in the following list: • Pictures (more commonly known as the file browser) is the standard file selection option in Photoshop. • Scanner provides options for Unofficially, the total value of these development projects stands at $64 billion. It's a good bet that ultimately, government authorities will spend more than $20 billion on them, ensuring that the projects that are truly eligible for these grants will be fully funded. Because the sheer number of large-scale projects involved, the pressure is on to begin quickly. In some cases, the federal government may offer grants to help a state meet its goals for infrastructure projects. If so, money may be available to help the state meet its timeline or address a community's specific needs. What does it take to get a state to apply? The application process itself is relatively straightforward. States can request a direct grant, an indirect grant or a federal financial agreement. Direct grants are competitive and are awarded based on how well a state's plan meets the federal guidelines. States that do not meet these guidelines may be ineligible for a grant. Indirect grants come in two varieties: low-interest loan authority and lending bonds. Both are awarded based on the state's prior performance and the availability of qualified applicants. The most complex type of grant available are the federal financial agreements. These are benefits-based and are awarded based on the state's success and past performance. They use a formula that includes factors such as population growth, education attainment, workforce development, transportation and infrastructure needs and outcomes, such as health care. The key questions As in many areas of government, the federal government isn't entirely forgiving. States need to be specific with answers to four key questions. What would the project do? Most states are required to describe the need to be addressed by the project. Which federal programs do the project benefit? This is where the high-visibility grant or loan authority may be used. But this does not automatically result in a favorable response. The state's application should be a complete package, including a clear connection between how the project benefits the state and the role of the state in addressing the requirements outlined in the grant program. Where is the project located? Certain projects are obviously more attractive than others. If a project is located in a state that doesn't support it, states often face the prospect of competing against states that do. Are there other existing programs that provide similar benefits? Here's where states have the most flexibility to make a case.

Recombinant humanized human interferon-alpha-2a in the treatment of Kaposi's sarcoma. Six patients with Kaposi's sarcoma (KS) were treated with recombinant human interferon-alpha-2a (rhIFN-alpha2a) at a dose of 3×10^6 units/m² three times weekly for 24 weeks. At the end of the first phase of treatment (16 weeks), the progression-free survival was 4/6 (66.6%), and three patients were alive (50%) and no patient had died. All patients showed objective response at the end of the second phase of treatment (24 weeks). The main side effect was flu-like syndrome, observed in all cases (7/7). Eight additional patients with KS were treated with the same dose of rhIFN-alpha2a for 12 months. Only one patient was alive (12.5%) and five patients (62.5%) died of KS. rhIFN-alpha2a was not effective for the treatment of KS in the phase II trial in our patients. SOPA / PIPA: Pushing The Internet Backwards Boycott T-Mobile: "You're my high speed provider; you're not my cell provider." Today, the House Judiciary Committee voted to move a bill forward that will allow the government to shut down websites like Google and Wikipedia. This bill, the PROTECT IP Act, is named after two articles of clothing; it's a combination of SOPA and PIPA, and is known as SOPA/PIPA for short. It's a critical bill to internet companies (since they are based in the United States) and against countries outside the US because they fear that this bill will have an impact on their own laws. It's not that complicated really. It's a way for the US government to go after websites that are associated with illegal activities. So if you're running a website that is obviously, or even remotely suspected of facilitating illegal activities (sales of firearms, child porn, etc.) it's quite likely that the US government will want to shut it down. The bill enables this through an "Internet blacklist" that companies like Google, Amazon, Facebook, and others are expected to maintain. The US government has the power to demand that these companies ban a website from their servers, and they are given an easy way to do so: if a site's administrator claims to
