Religious Life in Andalusia Andalusia is one of the largest and most significant Muslim populations in Europe. It is unique in Andalusia, its deep roots in the deep Arab-Muslim civilisation. The Andalusian Muslims are also connected to the rest of the world through the Islamic world and the Arab world. History Andalusia's integration into European history started with the arrival of the Romans in the third century BC. The connection of the Andalusian Muslims to Arab culture and civilisation was initiated by the Umayyad and Abbasid caliphates, who had a special focus on understanding and disseminating their new religion to other continents. Andalusian Muslim scholars played a fundamental role in the spread of Islam in the medieval world. The Avicenna (Ibn Sina), Averroes (Ibn Rushd), Zayd ibn Ali (Zayd al-Din) and many other great Andalusian Muslim scholars and scientists contributed to the natural and medical sciences and other subjects. Many universities and schools were established by the Muslims in Spain to serve Muslims and also non-Muslims. Andalusia's connection to the rest of the Islamic world is also important. Every year in Cordoba, in the month of May (Shawwal), thousands of pilgrims gather to attend a major gathering, the Mawlid al-Nabawiyya, which commemorates the Mawlid of the Prophet Muhammad. The Muslims of Andalusia have always had a clear Muslim identity and were never influenced by European culture, but they were influenced by it, especially with the victory of Andalusia in the Reconquista against the Muslims in the name of Christianity. Islam is not only a religious phenomenon, but also has a social dimension, and this was expressed in the work of the Muslims in the various fields. As is known, the Muslims of Andalusia and the Maghreb were also a very educated people in their countries and also were very active in their region. The Muslims of Andalusia have always been cosmopolitan and have studied the religion and culture of other countries.
