"He was a very popular person." At a reception in a Potomac home attended by about 100 people, the Rev. Warren L. Manning, the president and general minister of the United Church of Christ, said "Kris met with each and every one of us who worked with him — and later with others." AD AD "He was far more than an intern," he said. "He was the incarnation of the very heart of what we stand for love, peace and justice. He was one of the truest, strongest young men I have ever known. He left his mark on this world — and so will his work continue." Vic Sello, a computer industry executive who worked as an intern for the U.S. Senate in 1994, was in Charleston as he remembered it. "He was part of the African American community in Charleston, so he was part of a lot of people that would have attended church in Charleston," he said. "I'm so sorry for the people who were hurt, but it's kind of nice to think about how people were brought together to help each other." AD At the time, Sello said, he didn't know Kris well. He was impressed by the determination, though, and when he learned a few months later that the young man had died, he thought of the memory he had of his intern. "I didn't see him enough. He was the kind of person who was tough on the outside, but soft on the inside," he said. "You see it a lot of times with teenagers — they're tough because they've been dealing with a lot of stuff in their own life. But they're really nice and caring and sweet." Kris Charles was born July 2, 1992, in Dec 648931e174
