A San Francisco-based company named Boatcoin has raised $6.5 million in funding to create “tickets” for “selling boat rides on the blockchain.” A BoatCoin founders have used the company’s new funding to buy a $10 million yacht. The BoatCoin will create a blockchain-based system for charging passengers for boat rides on the San Francisco Bay and, according to the company, allow the purchaser to “keep track of the transaction on the distributed ledger.” A BoatCoin employee told Business Insider: “Businesses traditionally only have a paper trail for transactions; we want to offer people a safe and secure ticketing experience that can be redeemed on any trip, whether it’s a 10 mile charter to Sausalito or a 200 mile trip to Vancouver.” Founded in December, 2017, BoatCoin is co-founded by Ian Turpin, who is also the CEO of Homejoy, a company in which he left to co-found BoatCoin. Turpin previously founded XO Communications, which helped found Dijon Investment Partners and received more than $800 million in venture funding. He later founded Homejoy, a company that runs an app that lets homeowners and renters “clean, de-clutter, and organize” rooms in their homes and apartments. The company, which is based in San Francisco, raised $8.2 million in its first round of funding in November, 2017. The company describes itself as “the world’s first blockchain-based ticketing platform for the hospitality and travel industry.” It has also raised $2.5 million from the venture-capital fund Accel and has the support of Sir Richard Branson of Virgin Airlines, who is its co-chairman. Darin O’Sullivan, who also co-founded BoatCoin, told Business Insider that the boat costs $120,000, but it is a very powerful yacht with a swimming pool. “This is a really cool place to live for a long period of time,” O’Sullivan said of the yacht. “We bought it for ourselves. If you need something for a team meeting, or you’re entertaining people who are coming in at a certain time, it’s great for that.” “We picked a big yacht,” added O’Sullivan. ♦
