Liquid diets and fasting facilitate oxygen radical production from rat liver microsomes. The effects of parenteral administration of nutrient-free solutions on hepatic oxygen radical production has been examined in anesthetized rats. Peripheral intravenous infusion of a nonpolarizable medium, mineral oil, at 0.32 kcal/min for 3 h and 10-20 h at rates sufficient to equal the energy expenditure of the fasting animal provided a hemodynamically stable situation and favored a rapid recovery of the injected animals. There was a significant increase (p less than 0.05) in hepatic microsomal xanthine oxidase activity in mineral oil-treated rats; maximum activity was reached 3 h after infusion. An increase (p less than 0.05) in microsomal lipid peroxide production was observed at 6 h, and by 24 h after infusion there was a close correlation between the oxygen radicals formed and the total

README.md OpenTitan OpenTitan is a DNS server intended to replace OpenDNS.org and Google (OpenDNS).

OpenTitan is designed with simplicity and speed in mind. A mod_h2c, Apache, and nginx implementation exists for those users who want to customize or harden

OpenTitan. The code base is a fork of Project Lux and OpenDNS DotOrg. You can follow OpenTitan here: GitHub Wiki

Roadmap Retired features: MX and NS records were there at one time, but have been moved to least-expected, so it does not make sense to keep them around. They will be retained until they will be needed in the future. The TTL of the DNS records were set to 60 seconds, which means that if a change was made in the DNS database, the change would take a minute (60 seconds) to propagate to every DNS server. For some users, this was a possible solution. For other users, that's too slow. The Home page (actually the Host page) displayed the currently active user's IP address. However, it contained no information about which IP address belongs to the account. Obviously, the user who has the IP address specified in the Home page has a greater chance of being the user the IP belongs to. Web Server The OpenTitan DNS server can listen to several ports at the same time, but this was only used for reading and parsing, then, stored in an SQLite database. After that, the web server was used to serve the web pages. The web server was written in Python and used nginx for serving the web pages. A source file can be converted to HTML and sent directly to the client browser. This feature was used in some of the tests. bff6bb2d33
