What's new:

was the debut album for the Seattle band Pearl Jam and was produced by Neil Young. Overview Touring as Sweet Young Thing in 1991, the band were introduced to Canadian entrepreneur Bill Walton and moved to Vancouver to record the album. The recording experience was mixed, with bassist Jeff Ament saying, "it was like coming out of the woodwork onto the street. People run over and ask you where to go, and you say, 'the studio'." The album was released in October 1991 and received mixed reviews. A moderate rock radio hit in the US, the single "Even Flow", which in some markets was retitled "Even Steven", was a new radio hit for the band in a converted garage and living room. Ament said that in Canada, the song did not find an audience and "didn't catch on at all". Furthermore, in the US, the title track "Let's Get Together" received unsolicited criticism, with lead singer Eddie Vedder saying, "I don't get it. Why are people mad? "Get Together" is a really OK song." The single, released in a double-sided 7" in 1992, reached position 65 on the US Billboard Hot 100 singles chart, becoming the band's first US chart single. The follow-up single was "Even Flow", which reached position 22. The album's title track "Let's Get Together" reached 52. The group then moved to Los Angeles and renamed themselves Pearl Jam. The 1994 release, Binaural, was recorded with Jack Endino in Cielo Studios. The song "Even Flow" appears in the TV series Rubicon.

Track listing Unless otherwise noted, information is from the CD version and the CD booklet of Pearl Jam. The 2012 Pearl Jam box set releases the CD version with the title track on side one.
