One of the most important elements in a movie is the location. Highly specialized production tools, from digital motion graphics, visual effects, and animation to digitally controlled camera technologies, have made it much easier and more affordable to achieve the best possible visual quality in the creation of motion pictures. Each location demands. Transforming an ordinary working environment into a thriving, active space adds so much to the film experience. Camera location is the most visible element of a scene. . . Production logistics can be of prime importance, particularly in this time of high energy costs. Tinted windows in a camera car and rooftop shots, like the one shown here, are the result of a shot designer's creativity in working with the production and location teams. Any company producing these shots will offer a variety of shot types. Shot. These options are the result of the efficiency of capturing image. Work on multiple projects simultaneously. Most Directors of Photography are able to switch from one type of shot to another with relative ease, thanks to their close working relationship with the Director of Photography. Director of Photography. While working as a cameraman as a key member of a crew, the DP has many responsibilities; from capture to post. The location scout. Locations are a critical element in every production. The shot is likely to be shot with different types of cameras. " " Some of the most prominent motion picture makers come from outside the industry and typically all of their experience comes from television production. Program and style. . . Program and style are based on data from the DP. The DP can be the producer's chief decision maker when it comes to shot selection and style. The subject. The camera must meet the subject, and the subject must meet the camera. Contingencies. When the shoot is under way, there may be any number of scenarios that result in changes to the original script. The DP takes these change requests into account and, even when schedule changes lead to additional shoots, the production schedules and the shoot schedules are always kept in sync. Assets. Production assets are primarily the property of the production company. They can include locations, props, and vehicles. The DP also makes sure that the production is running smoothly.
