10..Q: Time complexity of red-black tree I am reading chapter 10 of CLRS and found the time complexity of red-black tree is  $O(h)$ , where  $h$  is the height of the tree. Recall that  $h$  is the height of the tree and the height is defined as  $\text{lca}(i,j) - \text{minimum}$ . This is what I understand from this question Is Red-black tree height define as maximum? But then I am confused why it say  $O(h)$  instead of  $O(h^2)$ , as the maximum will be at  $O(h^2)$  with the use of the heap. The definition of max is the maximum of 3 or more values and the heap used here will be either in the tree or in a stack. I am not sure. Can someone please help me understand this. Thanks. A: The question you linked is on the confusion of what  $h$  means in the context of red-black trees. In the context of red-black trees (just for simplicity), we can think of each node as a "bucket" and "node" just like any graph. A bucket is an ordered set of nodes in the tree (hence the "H" suffix to the  $h$  there). We count from 0 to the maximum bucket count for the tree (the "h" suffix is unnecessary). The order within a bucket is a LCA (longest common ancestor) - the node that was the most common ancestor of all the nodes in that bucket. A bucket of  $h$  nodes will have a bucket count of  $h$ , as  $h$  buckets contain all the nodes from the bottom to the top of the tree. It is also useful to see the bucket count as the height of the tree. The height of a tree can have positive or negative values. Lastly, a R-B tree always has a depth of one, so the height of any given tree will be 1 or 0. The  $O(h)$  complexity you quote above assumes that the tree has a reasonable height - such as  $h$  e79caf774b

I'm downloading windows 8.1 ISO right now.. windows 8.1 is going to be a fantastic upgrade for the Microsoft. a selection of 1970's merchandising, music and films, with either of which to live. I often wonder what it would be like to live in a time when it is okay for people to be sexist (and at this point in time, there is a pretty good chance that they are being honest when they say it's ok). I can't help but wish that the same kind of 'politically correct' attitude wouldn't also go hand in hand with classism. If I'm right, everyone in this forum is fortunate that they have at least a few good blokes in their lives, too. Just a general observation: I think that notions of social and political correctness make people sound as if they are apologetic. Surely the point of such attitudes is not to remove rather than amplify the unaccepted phenomena? I think that attitudes of social and political correctness have the benefit of making people think, and, in the case of political correctness, of making them be hyper-critical. I see it this way: If a group, or a statement, or a person is deemed to be offensive by a certain group of people, it is possible that the group of people don't actually want to be offended, but they are offended anyway because they have been brought up to be offended by people they disagree with (or disagree with the statement), even if that is not their own choice. I think that it is helpful for people to have this kind of hyper-criticism, as it makes one think about the world that one lives in. It also makes it more likely that people will start thinking for themselves and questioning what is being said. On a personal level, I think that the benefits of social and political correctness are that they do not define my sexuality, my race, my religion, my culture, etc... I am allowed to love who I want to love, who I want to sleep with, who I want to spend the rest of my life with, who I want to experiment with, etc... In this way, I am not diminished by being overly sensitive, nor am I diminished by thinking that people are saying one thing when they mean another. While everyone
