The role of epidural sufentanil in labour pain management. Epidural analgesia has been used in the parturient for the relief of labour pain since 1973. We initiated this study to evaluate the effects of epidural sufentanil in patients undergoing analgesia for labour pain. Randomized double blind study with an epidural analgesia group (n = 20) and a control group (n = 20) receiving patient controlled intravenous (i.v.) morphine for labour pain. Epidural volume Bupivacaine (0.125%) 3 ml/h with 7.5 micrograms of sufentanil and the i.v. bolus of 100 micrograms was administered through an elastomeric pump to both groups. Pain relief was evaluated using the visual analogue scale (VAS) of 0 to 10, the verbal rate scale (VRS) and the labor progress scale (LPS) at 2 and 4 h after the initiation of analgesia. Respiratory depression and Apgar scores were also evaluated. A third group (n = 15) receiving sufentanil i.v. bolus of 100 micrograms or 1 mg and epidural volume of 2 ml of bupivacaine 0.75% with sufentanil 7.5 micrograms/ml were also studied. I think everyone did. It's really important to remember where you've come from, as well as moving forward. it's currently a group deal, but i'll run the crips from me every time. Q: Read specific cells in multi-column file I have a.txt file which is formatted as follows: 7 12 2 8 4 13 1 9 I would like to print out the first 2 cells, or the 2nd and 3rd cells, etc. So far I'm having trouble splitting it up. So far I have: def main(): my_file = open("my_text_file.txt", 'r') data = my_file.readline() for line in data.splitlines(): print (line) my_file.close() main() I also tried to use "line.split()" but that didn't seem to work. A: You could just read the relevant items from the file using the file's.next() method: with open('my_text_file.txt') as my_file: data = my_file.next().strip()
