I have a form with some controls like Label, TextBox, TextBlock etc. In these controls, I have an action like 'Hide' and action 'Show'. I need to manage the values in these controls, so I setted an integer value in property INVISIBLE for these controls that will be managed. In other words, If I want to show a control, I send the int value (0) to set the value to visible property. If I want to hide a control, I send the int value (1) to set the value to invisible property. How I can get these value in the code behind from the XAML? A: This is very broad and I don't believe there is a "silver bullet" way of doing it. I'm going to assume that you don't want the TextBlock to render but still interact with the text like a TextBox. If you do want to put data in the TextBlock and then render them then there is a built in Tag property that you can use to put the text that is also of type TextBlock (I've written a library to make this easier called MS Fluent). The Tag property is a string, so you can pass a Boolean and it will be true or false If you want to get the value out of the TextBlock from the code behind, you can iterate through the Control tree and examine the TextBlock. It would be like this (untested): 6d1f23a050
