QuarkXPress 5.5 - Scans exactly, thanks to OCR 2.0 Writing or editing in a word processor program often comes with a demand for skilled in-text optical character recognition (OCR) solutions. However, most of the modern applications available are suitable for text or files, making scanning and OCR practical only with a bit of luck. When looking for an application able to consistently produce accurate results, one should choose a strong enough OCR engine with high-level multilingual support. A perfect scanner ought to support both Latin and Cyrillic languages, as well as all other typographic scripts, and should provide accurate results even when dealing with texts at a low resolution. Evernote and Windows Live Writer are examples of such programs, and QuarkXPress 5.5 from Quark, Inc. has excellent performance in this respect. Moreover, the application can recognize language in multiple fonts, including handwriting, and images, as well as allow one to work with complex layouts. These features are excellent for the creation of flexible layouts, as text can be easily replaced with graphics or pictures. As any other application, the QuarkXPress 5.5 is not without faults. The current release of the tool may become too heavy for old Mac OS systems, as well as for those on a low-memory Virtual Machine. Additionally, its user interface can sometimes be slightly confusing. However, it is the best dictionary generator available on the market, as it can handle large text sizes efficiently, makes the process quick and easy, and offers a user-friendly design. QuarkXPress 5.5 - Scans exactly, thanks to OCR 2.0 For your convenience, you can get QuarkXPress 5.5. A special offer is available for QuarkXPress Gold subscribers: use the code "GCWL" when purchasing the new version.
