Only with the advent of portable computing devices was it made accessible to all. The inexpensive nature and relative simplicity of these devices has had an impact in the way computing technology has been perceived since then. This change in its use has been particularly marked with the increasing popularity of mobile phones and hand held computing devices. The latter has been instrumental in the development of social networks, widespread access to websites and e-commerce. Considering the highly flexible nature of modern networks, this research aims to identify the impact of mobile broadband access, along with other technological advances that have penetrated the social sphere, on the environment and the manner in which it is perceived. Some 16,878 blog posts were analyzed from 12 Spanish and Portuguese blogs focusing on topics related to the environment during a 4-year period (2007-2010). The results were used to construct a model that illustrates the social network's role in the degradation of the environment. The variability of nodes' connectivity allows us to assess the role of different devices and services in the preservation and promotion of the environment. The results obtained clearly confirm the need to regulate and control the advances in technology, which to date have been uncoordinated and at times counterproductive.](1752-153X-6-S1-S38-1){#F1} 1. Reviewing the literature ----- The main contribution of this research will be the analysis and description of the main reasons why people behave as they do, with a direct impact on the preservation of the environment. The creation of this environment has traditionally been the
