Cloning and characterisation of the third human cGMP-specific 3'-phosphodiesterase gene. A gene encoding a cGMP-specific 3'-phosphodiesterase was isolated from a human fetal brain cDNA library. The predicted amino-acid sequence of the protein showed extensive homology to mouse and rat eosinophil cGMP-specific 3'-phosphodiesterase (E-PDE III). Northern analysis of poly(A)+ RNA from human fetal tissues and human fibroblasts showed that the gene is differentially expressed during development and in adult human tissues. The tobacco industry has been fighting against the vaping industry since its inception, as some claim vaping is dangerous and anyone who uses e-cigarettes, vapes or the more serious/popular sub-sector-microdosing (meaning ingesting very tiny amounts of cannabis (or other) into the lungs) is potentially doing harm to their brains. Scientists have shown that vaping is actually very beneficial for the general health of the body, by injecting harmful substances that can be found in tobacco smoke into the lungs and not absorbing them. Vaping, they claim, can actually help in reducing or completely preventing damages that can occur in the body when left untreated. Now the e-cig industry has released a petition to show that vaping companies don't harm the public, claiming the e-cig industry is just a harmless corner of the industry. The petition (of course) states that the dangers of vaping are just 'propaganda' and relies on false information about vaping companies, who claim the industry is run by youths and non-profit organizations who wish to destroy the public's interest in vaping. Not only are e-cig companies claiming that vaping is safe, but a lot of their products are not manufactured by e-cig companies but just regular tobacconists, whose products also vapes e-liquid. The really questionable part of the petition is that it claims that 1 in 5 e-cig products are "tobacco products", despite the fact that they aren't made of tobacco and don't contain tobacco's chemicals like nicotine, tar, carbon monoxide, ammonia and arsenic. The real problem with the anti
